I tried by letter-writing to bring her parents to my way of thinking. But I failed, and so I came on to personally plead my cause, but with no better result. They were obdurate, and, though my sweetheart and I supplicated them in duets, it was of no avail. You may imagine my despair. I was at the bottom, and was about to give up and return home when I ran against an old friend of mine, a member of the local staff of one of the daily papers. He noticed that I was down in the mouth, and though by evasive replies I endeavored to hide the truth from aim, he managed by a little skilful questioning to obtain the whole secret.
